great success. It was a little advanced, perhaps, but untrammelled—that's the word, untrammelled. There wasn't a trammel in all Webster Hall, look for it as one might.

Nor a camel either. There were Fatimas apienty, just as one has always imagined they look in the lighter moments of a hot day in the seragilo; there were many who looked as if they might hall from Mecca, green tarboosh and all, and of course there were "naturals," meaning those whose fascination depended little upon the aid of artifice. Hassam was there in the fiesh, Hamsens, too, and an Egyptian delty or two, but of camels nary a one. A camel can go seven days without a drink, but who in Sahara, or Sheherasade, wants to be a came!?

her stinger with ease. Brains win every time.

But to get back to the ballet. Will Reinicke, who is by way of being an illustrator, designed the costumes one day when he had a minute to spare. They came to him, he said, in a flash of inspiration, but they looked, to be downspiration, but they looked, to be dow

DETROIT, Mich., Nov. 25 .- Detroiters DETROIT, Mich., Nov. 25.—Detroiters bade Sarah Bernhardt a probable last farewell to-night when they heard the famous tragedienne act her first role in English. She appeared as Modeline in "The False Model," a one act comedy.

Although a woman of many talents Mme. Bernhardt, up to to-night, never felt she could master English well enough to speak it on the stage. It was new to her but highly pleasing and surprising to the audience that filled the theatre.
